FEAR THE FUTSALLER

The structure of youth soccer training varies by country. As a result, so too does the style of game play at their professional levels. Brazil, for instance, has long been known for fielding players who pride themselves on supreme foot skills and creative combination play. One aspect of their development that stands out is Brazil's keen interest and investment in futsal.

In response, youth soccer training in the U.S. is quickly changing at the local level to meet the same standards. Many professional futsal leagues are already established across the states.

SportsHouse Development in Mustang serves as the local Oklahoma City tournament venue. With another new facility soon to be constructed in Edmond, the game of futsal is soon to be a staple in youth player development.

Any player can run around an open field and make a few good tackles and passes. However, futsal's heavy focus on fast play and lots of touches is the best way for players to develop their foot skills. Operating in the confined spaces of indoor arenas further forces learning minds and bodies to adapt. Those who are confident and competent at attacking and defending in dynamic indoor environments will be the same players who are best-equipped to lead the way in outdoor club play.

Developing players now have the opportunity to be at the forefront of new age, personalized futsal training with MB10 Footy.
